In Collaboration With

IQAC, Rabindranath Tagore University, Hojai

One-week workshop on manuscriptology and paleography holds immense academic and cultural significance. It provides scholars, researchers, and history enthusiasts with essential skills to decipher, interpret, and preserve ancient scripts and texts. Participants gain hands-on experience in reading historical manuscripts, understanding script evolution, and identifying linguistic and stylistic variations across different periods.

The workshop fosters interdisciplinary learning, bridging history, linguistics, and archival studies. It also emphasizes conservation techniques, ensuring that valuable historical documents remain accessible for future generations. Such training enhances research accuracy, aiding in the authentication and contextualization of historical records.

Moreover, the workshop will serve as a platform for collaboration among experts, enabling knowledge exchange and promoting heritage preservation. By equipping participants with paleographic expertise, the program will contribute to the broader academic mission of safeguarding cultural heritage and advancing historical research methodologies.
